The state standards have opened the door to shared opportunities for teachers in all curricular areas to guide students through the reading and production of informational texts. This Fox Valley Writing Project course has been designed by two FVWP Teacher Leaders who will engage you in reading, writing, listening, and speaking around informational texts that apply to all curricular areas.

The course is split between new learning and time to plan for the use of these types of texts and writing in your district's curriculum.

Who should enroll?

- Any K-12 ELA, Content Area, or Specialty Teacher
- Reading Specialists, Instructional Coaches

Institute Highlights

- Become better acquainted with the Informational Text standards for reading and writing
- Learn new approaches to teaching that engages students in reading and writing infotexts
- Register with a colleague or teaching team; have time to collaborate and plan lessons and units
- Share ideas and network with other area teachers

Details

- August 3-7, 2015; 8:30-3:00
- UW-Washington County, Room 101

About the Instructors

Robyn Bindrich is a K-12 literacy coach in Kewaskum. Robyn has an undergraduate minor in English and a Master's in Literacy from Concordia University. She participated in the 2011 Fox Valley Writing Project Summer Institute.

Paul Walter teaches seventh-grade ELA at Slinger Middle School and taught social studies for many years. A 2010 participant in the Fox Valley Writing Project Summer Institute, Paul also has a master's degree in Education from Marian University and a Graduate Certificate in Creative Writing from U.W. Oshkosh.

Both Robyn and Paul have been dubbed by WSRA (the Wisconsin State Reading Association) as "expert literacy educators" as they prepare to present with national author Stephanie Harvey at the 2015 WSRA Conference. They also serve on the Fox Valley Writing Project leadership team.
